Here's just some of what federal government health inspectors found in Prospect's California hospitals:¹

- Shabby and incomplete record keeping on medical mistakes and prescriptions

- Surgical tools splotted with reddish, yellow and black color substances

- Failure to note suicide risks among psychiatric patients
- Intensive care and medical ambulatory care units improperly staffed
- Surgical instruments used to hold body cavities open found to be discolored with a film build-up

- A dirty surgical unit shut down by the federal government

- Operating room suites unsanitary, with dust and debris
- Improper storage of biohazard waste, lab specimens and oxygen tanks
- A defibrillator left unplugged and unable to sustain a charge in the event of a power outage

- A widespread pattern of ineffective cleaning, disinfecting, or preventing the spread of infection

- Failure to ensure correct pain, antibiotic and heart medications
- Issues with how anesthesia is administered
- No means to ensure medical staff were professionally qualified for their positions
- Improper storage of medication

- Patients catheterized without a doctor's order

- Problems found with dialysis treatments
- A dialysis machine covered in a brownish substance
